Entergy Mississippi Files Spin-off, Merger Request with State Regulators

Entergy Mississippi and ITC Holdings Corp. filed a joint application Oct. 5 with the Mississippi Public Service Commission to create an industry-leading electric transmission business serving Mississippi.

The proposed spin-off and merger transaction is another step in Entergy's plan to adapt its business to a changing world and deliver benefits to customers and communities. As a system initiative, the transaction must be reviewed and approved by all of Entergy's local and federal regulators, as well as ITC shareholders. To date, it has been filed in Louisiana, New Orleans, Arkansas and with the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission.

The proposal represents Entergy's long-term, strategic view of the electricity business.

This proposal builds on the years of hard work and aggressive investment to improve service to our customers, said Haley Fisackerly, president and chief executive officer of Entergy Mississippi. It paves the way for new investment, new expertise and an independent company singularly focused on transmission in the region.

Under the proposal, electric transmission service in western Mississippi and in the mid-South would be provided by ITC, while Entergy would focus on generation and distribution. Assuming all regulatory approvals and other closing conditions are met, transaction would close in 2013.

The electricity industry and Entergy's operating companies face growing challenges to keep pace with the capital investment requirements necessary to maintain and upgrade infrastructure, meet environmental regulations and serve an energy-intensive economy. In the industry as a whole, these investments are projected to total $1.5 trillion to $2.0 trillion between 2012 and 2030. As the nation's only independent, investor-owned transmission-only utility, ITC can successfully finance significant transmission system improvements while delivering operational expertise to the region.

We look forward to serving Mississippi and the entire region to meet future energy demands, said Joseph L. Welch, ITC chairman, president and chief executive officer. Jackson will be ITC's new regional headquarters, and we are excited about working with local stakeholders, customers and members of the business community.

More information is being published periodically at entergy.com/transmissionmerger and on the intranet.
