RE: Proposed Global Operations and Global Procurement Leadership of the Combined Company

I am pleased to announce the proposed leadership structure for our combined Global Operations and Global Procurement teams, which would become effective upon the close of the transaction.

Global Operations

The proposed global operations leadership team builds on the exceptional foundation of Actavis' operations management team and adds unique specialty manufacturing expertise and leadership from Allergan. Led by Wayne Swanton, SVP Global Operations, the proposed leadership team will be responsible for supporting the combined company's expanded brands, generics, OTC and biologics businesses with world class quality, industry-leading customer service levels and a cost-competitive operating structure.

With nearly 12,000 employees operating in approximately 40 facilities spanning 20 countries, the global operations team will be one of the largest functional teams within the combined company. The operations network will have the capability to manufacture nearly every dosage form, immediate & modified release solid dosage (including hormones) semi-solids, transdermals, gels, liquids ophthalmics, biologics, injectables and medical devices. The combined network will also have state-of-the-art distribution capability.

The proposed Global Operations Leadership Team will be:

Global Manufacturing will be structured into three segments based on geography or technology. The legacy Actavis structure of International Manufacturing led by Patrick Brunner, and Americas & Ireland Manufacturing led by Miguel Gomez, will remain unchanged. For the combined company, we will create a third and new segment Specialty Manufacturing.

Specialty Manufacturing, led by Patrick O'Donnell, a legacy Allergan executive, will include the eight legacy Allergan manufacturing locations: Westport, Ireland; Pringy, France; Guarulhos, Brazil; Heredia, Costa Rica; Waco, Texas; Fall River, Massachusetts; Biologics, Irvine, California; and Biologics, Northern California. In addition, the two legacy Actavis injectable manufacturing sites Nerviano, Italy and Bucharest, Romania will become part of Specialty Manufacturing, reporting to Patrick.

The combined Global Operations structure realigns some functions in legacy Allergan, driven either by compliance or to leverage knowledge more broadly across the network. Upon close, all Quality positions will report into Claire Gilligan's Global Quality function and all Pharmaceutical Technology positions will report into Marcelo Omelczuk's Global Pharm Tech organization. There will continue to be a strong dotted-line reporting relationship for these functions to Site Heads, including continuing participation on site leadership teams.

Over the coming weeks, additional pre-integration planning will take place which will provide further clarity to how the remainder of the Global Operations organization will be aligned. Decisions will be communicated as they are finalized.

Global Procurement

At close, the combined organization will be among the industry's largest purchasers of materials, goods and services. The Global Procurement organization will be responsible for leveraging this power to maximize purchasing efficiencies, cost savings and value for our organization. Led by SVP, Helga Gudlaugsdottir, Global Procurement will oversee the management and execution of our global sourcing strategies across the combined organization. The team will include direct, indirect and R&D materials sourcing; Third Party Manufacturing contract and supply management; and the Company's Global Artwork studio.

The proposed Global Procurement Leadership Team will be:

Please join me in congratulating the colleagues named above for their proposed leadership roles in our combined Global Operations and Global Procurement teams.

Please be mindful that this announcement is for pre-integration planning purposes and will not be implemented until final approval post-close. In the meantime, I ask that you remain focused on driving our current respective businesses as you have certainly done over the past several months.
