Welcome, it is great to be here with all of you to share in the energy and excitement of what I believe to be a truly historic moment for our company and for health care consumers.

As announced yesterday, we have reached a definitive agreement to acquire Cigna, a transaction that will expand the positive impact we have on the health and wellbeing of our members, and help us realize our vision to be America's valued health partner.

So I would like to begin today by thanking all of you because Anthem would not have been in a position to pursue this acquisition without your hard work and the results we have achieved, together.

Each of you helped make this possible, so thank you, and congratulations. (pause for applause)

I know many of you have questions about this announcement, and probably the most common one is, what does this mean for me? So let me start by addressing that.

For right now, the answer is simple: there is no change.

Though we have announced that an agreement has been reached, finalizing the transaction will be a complex and lengthy process that we expect to close in the second half of 2016.

There are a variety of legal, shareholder, and regulatory approvals we must obtain before the transaction is allowed to close, so our teams will be very focused there initially.

Until we've obtained those approvals and close the transaction, the two companies may not formally combine operations, systems, or contractual relationships in any way.

However, once the transaction is finalized, we must also achieve the savings targets that we have committed to and that our investors expect from a transaction of this size.

So we need to begin planning for that by leveraging the deep and unmatched health care knowledge, talent, and expertise of both organizations and identifying any duplicative operations, systems, processes, and resources.

To facilitate this important work, transition teams from both companies will be formed and charged with developing plans on how to best integrate Cigna's operations and businesses into Anthem.

If you are a member of one of these workgroups, we will need your leadership, innovation and collaboration to ensure this transition goes as quickly and as seamlessly as possible.

If you are not directly involved with the transition, then your responsibilities are more important than ever.

We must stay the course. We have many operational and financial commitments to meet in 2015 and tremendous growth opportunities across our businesses that we cannot allow to pass us by.

Most importantly, during this interim period and beyond, we must ensure our customers, members, and provider and vendor partners experience no change in our positive relationships or disruption of service.

I know this sounds like a lot of work and it will be but I believe that when we are through, no company will be better positioned to address the health care challenges of the increasingly diverse segments, membership, and communities we serve and I am confident that, together, we will rise to the occasion and succeed.

With that said, let me share some of my own perspectives on this transaction.

Health care is undergoing a rapid and unprecedented transformation. The pace of change, coupled with high costs, wide variation in the quality of care delivered, and a disconnected system that is difficult to navigate present significant challenges for everyday consumers.

Rising costs are driven by a multitude of factors including widespread chronic disease, poor quality, and a lack of care coordination across the system.

Additionally, while new clinical discoveries, treatments, and technologies hold promise for conditions we once thought incurable, we may never realize their potential benefits if they are not affordable for consumers.

Affordability is king, and it's what our customers look to us to provide and what the combined company must continue to deliver.

This transaction will help us operate more efficiently to reduce our own operational costs, and, at the same time, enhance our ability to manage the cost drivers that negatively impact affordability.

By combining the two companies, we will be able to offer more high-value products and services to a broader and more diverse customer base including individuals, employers, state and Federal government partners, specialty consumers, and international customers.

The combined networks would provide more choice when selecting hospitals, physicians, and health care professionals so members receive the best, most affordable health care.

By combining our data and analytic capabilities, we will be able to more quickly identify gaps in quality or recommended care and then more quickly deploy care management programs to address them and help our members better engage in the management of their own health conditions.

The acquisition is also highly aligned with our three strategic pillars provider collaboration; affordability and managing the total cost of care; and consumer-centricity each of which will be meaningfully expanded and enhanced by combining these two organizations.

From a business perspective, Cigna's capabilities and footprint are a positive match for Anthem's strategic plan and priorities for growth.

Anthem's best-in-class commercial business will be supplemented by Cigna's complementary capabilities to serve individuals and large and small group employers.

Cigna's innovative specialty capabilities will be combined with our increasingly successful specialty business to meet new consumer demands for affordable and integrated dental, vision, and life and disability coverage.

Both companies remain committed to providing best-in-class solutions for the nation's growing Medicaid, Medicare, and Dual Eligible populations and those served through the health insurance exchanges.

And Cigna's international presence will allow us to apply best practices to better identify, mitigate, and prevent disease here and abroad.

But to me, the most compelling value proposition associated with this transaction comes from the leadership teams, associates, and cultures that share a visible and deep dedication to innovation, customer service, and member health improvement.

These are the true drivers of our ability to deliver higher quality, affordable care to consumers across a broader geographic footprint.

As I travel around the country, your passion and enthusiasm is visible and contagious.

We've built a great culture and a great company together, and as CEO and Chairman of the Board of the combined company, I look forward to leading us through the next chapter in our rich history and the many ways we will better serve our members and our communities in the future.

So let me close by highlighting that when the transaction is completed, Anthem will serve more than 53 million members fifty-three million.

This presents an incredible opportunity, and an important responsibility to improve the health of our members and improve our health care system.

For those of you who have been to our Monument Circle Building, you have probably seen the names and faces of some of Anthem's and WellPoint's former leaders out in our atrium names like Larry Glasscock, Ben Lytle and Leonard Schaeffer.

Each of these leaders had a vision for this company, and they took bold action to accept this responsibility, address the health care challenges of the time, and position our company for a successful future.

And while the company and times were certainly different, Anthem's priority always has been and always will be ensuring as many consumers as possible have access to quality, affordable health coverage so they receive the care they need, when they need it.

And that is really what the acquisition of Cigna is all about carrying on the more than 75-year tradition of this company and our continuing commitment to the customers and communities we serve.

Thank you for joining me today and thank you for all you do to make Anthem America's valued health partner.
