Dear ECAC Member:

Today, as you may have heard, AT&T and SBC Communications announced a historic agreement in which SBC will acquire AT&T, creating the industry's premiere communications and networking company. As one of our most valued customers, I want to personally ensure that you have the facts on this agreement and what it will mean to the future of our business relationship.

Simply put, AT&T is fully committed to being your strategic communications partner today and for many years to come. Our pending combination with SBC is a marriage of strength that will only enhance our ability to innovate and invest to provide you with the industry's best networking and communications services and solutions for the long term. With this new entity, we're creating the nation's number one enterprise services provider; the leading global networking and communications provider; the number one government services provider; the nation's number one wireless service provider; the leading provider of domestic DSL service, with the industry's highest residential data revenue.

From a financial perspective, this deal creates a powerful force in an industry in need of consolidation and stabilization. On a pro-forma basis for 2004, for example, the combined AT&T and SBC (including SBC's 60 percent stake of Cingular) generated nearly $83 billion in revenue, with more than $23 billion in normalized EBITDA, $10 billion in normalized operating income and a 12.1 percent operating margin. From a cash flow perspective, which we define as normalized EBITDA less capex, the combined entity generated more than $14 billion in 2004 cash flow. Clearly, SBC understands the value that AT&T brings to the table, not only through our global capabilities and networking strength, but through our solid financial position as well.

Moving forward, we intend to fully leverage our combined competitive advantages on behalf of our customers and our shareowners. For example, as part of the new corporate entity, we'll continue to make significant investments in vital areas such as IP (Internet Protocol), network security, application-aware networking, mobility services and Voice over IP, allowing us to continue providing unsurpassed quality and value and the best customer experience in the global communications industry. The goal at AT&T remains unchanged: we want to deliver robust solutions that empower your business, drive your productivity and provide the best possible return on your communications investment.

The fact is, this combination is good for our shareowners, it's good for you and all of our enterprise customers and it's good for our employees, who now have the opportunity to play a central role in building the defining entity in communications for the 21st century.

AT&T's commitment to your business is unwavering. We appreciate the opportunity to serve you today, and we look forward to providing the type of reliable, secure and cost-effective solutions that you have grown to expect from our company and our people, fueling your success for many years to come.

It's an exciting new day for all of us at AT&T, and I'm delighted you'll be a part of our ongoing transformation. I thank you for your continued patronage, and encourage you to call or write me with any thoughts or concerns you might have.

Sincerely,
