Symantec-VERITAS Merger Supported by Key Institutional Advisor

Late Friday afternoon, Institutional Shareholder Services, Inc. (ISS) an independent firm that researches proposed mergers and provides objective vote recommendations to its clients issued a favorable recommendation for Symantec's pending merger with VERITAS.

In summarizing its findings, the June 10 report from ISS states, "On balance, we view that the long-term strategic basis for this transaction has merits and should enable the company to evolve its value proposition to enterprise customers in line with the increasing convergence between security and storage management. ISS research included a review of public documents and meetings with Symantec CEO John W. Thompson and VERITAS CEO Gary Bloom. ISS recommendations have been shown to carry a lot of bearing on shareholder votes. According to a June 10 article on CNET News, ISS influences 30-60 percent of share votes. ISS advises more than 1,300 institutional and corporate clients worldwide.

Glass Lewis, Inc., a relatively new advisory firm that, experts say, carries less influence with institutional accounts than does ISS, issued a report the day prior to the ISS report which recommended Symantec investors turn down the merger and that VERITAS investors vote for the merger. The Glass Lewis report claimed the deal was too expensive and the review committee did not see the strategic value of the combined company. Glass Lewis based their recommendation on public documents alone and their policy is not to speak with company management or customers in the course of their research.

When investors lack the resources to do adequate research themselves, they turn to firms like ISS to perform an objective analysis of the deal," says Helyn Corcos, Vice President, Investor Relations. "We're very pleased that ISS's comprehensive research resulted in a positive rating for the planned merger and we look forward to the results of the upcoming shareholder vote on June 24.

Please note: Stockholders of record as of May 12, 2005 have been mailed the joint proxy statement/prospectus in connection with the proposed merger and will be entitled to vote at the respective company's special stockholder meeting. Symantec and VERITAS are each holding a special meeting of stockholders on June 24, 2005, to approve matters relating to the proposed merger between the two companies.

We urge investors and security holders to read this filing because it contains important information about the merger.
