The Allmerica Securities Trust returned 3.86% for the third quarter of 2004, underperforming its benchmark, the Lehman Brothers U.S. Credit Index*, which returned 4.21%.

The U.S. economy appeared to have hit a soft patch entering the period, as economic growth slowed and the Federal Reserve Board continued its transition to higher short-term interest rates. Surprisingly slower job creation, more mixed economic data, a drop in industrial production and weaker retail sales raised questions about the sustainability of the pace of economic growth. Steadily rising crude oil prices took their toll on discretionary spending and consumer sentiment, and the Federal Reserve Board resolutely continued along its tightening cycle raising the federal funds rate twice during the quarter, in 25 basis point increments, to 1.75%. Uncertainty resulting from higher energy costs and rather benign inflation data helped the 10-year Treasury note to fall from a high of 4.58% at the start of the quarter to levels below the psychological 4.00% threshold, prior to quarter end. Sentiment changed again in the last few days of September on positive economic commentary by the Federal Reserve Board and stellar housing data. The 10-year Treasury note finally sold off from its recent highs to close the quarter at a yield of 4.12%. Despite the volatility in the Treasury market, overall spreads for other asset classes remained quite tame and directional during the quarter. With the 10-year Treasury note once again testing historically low territory, the higher yields offered by other asset classes proved too enticing for many investors. All spread sectors outperformed Treasury securities during the quarter.

Favorable fundamentals and low supply helped the corporate sector post the best excess returns for the period. Although a few shareholder friendly transactions were announced during the quarter, the overall assessment for holders of corporate debt was still positive, as the deleveraging trend in corporate balance sheets remained intact. Home Depot and JC Penney were added to the portfolio during the quarter. Home Depot is currently a high quality, stable name. JC Penney is a below investment grade security purchased to capture incremental yield versus higher rated department store peers. The investment manager believes the company may reach investment grade status in 2005. The portfolio's underperformance to the benchmark during the period was largely attributable to its duration position. In anticipation of rising interest rates, the portfolio duration was positioned short of the benchmark duration. However, interest rates declined during the last two months of the quarter, resulting in the portfolio's underperformance. The investment manager believes that interest rates will begin to rise over the coming months, as the economy continues to grow at a moderate pace and inflation begins to assert itself. While energy and terrorism remain wildcards, strong productivity growth, an accommodative interest rate environment, tame inflation, an improving job market and stable baseline demand growth bode well for steady expansion. Unfortunately, a benign outlook for the economy often tends to be unfavorable for bondholders. It is likely that the Federal Reserve Board will continue its measured march towards neutral monetary policy and that any faster-than-expected economic growth could result in higher interest rates and the specter of inflation. The investment manager thinks that the heady bond returns of the last few years will likely decline to the low single-digit levels in 2004 and 2005.
